

Once a Upon a Time in

THE DESERT OF ALAMEIN

Egypt never fails to play a major role at critical times and turns events around. This time the hero is Alamein.

A very small town in northern Egypt on the Mediterranean Sea coast in Matruh Governorate. It is 106 kilometers west of Alexandria and 240 kilometers northwest of Cairo.

However; back in the 40's of the last century it was the theatre of war. The battle of Alamein was both harsh and romantic. Montgomery, a charismatic British commander, matched by Rommel, one of the most striking German generals engaged in one of the most unusual battles such prominent armies had been through.

According to Churchill, the British troops had neither a victory before it nor a defeat after. subsequently, the Axis troops were defeated and retreated to Tunisia and the Alias military and political situation got strong again with many succeeding events.

Armies raise and armies fall while Egypt sat, like a spider in its web, at the centre of a crucial geo-strategic network.

*Written by
Reham El Gabry*

